THE MAGIC WAND.

An officer and his friend enter a filthy den in the city made by the rum fiend. A drunken father, dying mother and ragged girl occupy it. On the wall of the room is a tinsel wand, the spangles falling off. The officer tells its story. The girl was one in a Christmas pantomime. She was given this wand, and it was to be waved at a certain time. Immediately she waved it a prison was changed to a place of beauty and happiness. She imagined that if she could take it home and wave it there, her wretched home would be changed to a palace, her dying mother to an angel. She secretly carried the wand away, followed by an officer of the society which owned it. He saw her wave it over her mother and repeat the pantomime story, went back and told what he saw, and she was permitted to keep the wand, and she asserts that it wafted her mother to "the golden home of blisses."

TICKET OF LEAVE.

(Lifeboat Series by Geo. R. Sims.)

Tells how a young man named Ned was engaged to a girl whose father was dying. The girl's father had a son upon whom he doted, and would have been heartbroken if he had come to grief. One day this scapegrace was seen by Ned to shoot a tramp and rob him of his money. He rushed to him, seized the gun and the money, and Jack rushed off. As Ned was returning with the gun and money to where the tramp lay, he was pounced upon and taken to jail and was condemned to five years' penal servitude. Rather than allow the sad news to come to the old man, he bore the disgrace. When he came back no one received him. He was called Ticket-o'-leave. But one day Jack was in prison, and he confessed to the crime; then the nobility of Ned's conduct came out and he was married to Eve, and the whole country-side turned out to see the Ticket-o'-leave man's wedding.

(213) BROWN AND JONES FENCE.

Reading on the Slides.

Brown and Jones are neighbors. Each has, unknown to the other, determined to improve the side of his garden fence. It is a high one, and whilst Jones is tarring his side he finds whitewash coming through, and Brown is equally annoyed to find tar spreading over his whitewash. Each suspects his neighbor of trickery, and determines to go over and settle matters. They meet at the top of the fence and each is drenched by the contents of his neighbor's pail.

(214) BURDOCK'S GOAT.

(With Reading.)

Every picture sparkles with mirth, and the reading is a slide-splitter. The stray goat eats the clothes which are hanging out to dry, and butts the servant girl unmercifully. Her mistress essays to tame his spirits, but is fain to get inside—a subject for arulea and plaster. When Burdock gets home at night, he is very angry and disgusted with their childish cowardice, and that makes us enjoy his discomfiture all the more. The militia are at last sent for, but the last slide finds him alive and kicking.
